

Light

When light bounces off an object – you see the object.	When we originally see an object, we see it upside down. The optic nerve will take this image to the brain the right way up.	Shadows are formed because an object will block the light from travelling through it.
Light travels in a straight line.	The further the light source from the object the bigger the shadow will be.	